Several one-room school houses were erected in various places throughout Wayne Township until the citizens voted to supplant them by the more modern centralized schools.

There was a school at Cable that maintained school for the winter season in 1881. In 1893 they had the grade school in the township house and the higher grades in the house next to it, until the brick elementary building was built in 1893.

The high school building was ready for occupancy during the school year of 1916-17.

In 1947 there was talk of consolidating the schools of Cable, North Lewisburg and Woodstock. In 1951 the Champaign County School Board chose one local board to govern the new school district which became known as Triad.

The high schools of Cable and Woodstock were then combined to form the Wayne-Woodstock High School, leaving the elementary and jr. high grades at Cable. In the early 1960's the schools at Cable were closed, with the children going to the new Triad buildings, some still going to the Woodstock and North Lewisburg buildings. Thus ended the schools at Cable.
